

officer at Cincinnati-based Messer Construction, said that they're seeing estimates go up 10% to 20% over original calculations due to supply issues and inflation. The company is reworking budgets and doing value engineering to keep jobs within budgets, and clients are willing to cut back and "make adjustments in materials they need," he said. "Owners have been very flexible and understanding."

About the Article
